

2004 International Problem-Oriented Policing Conference

October 28-30, 2004
Westin Charlotte Hotel
Charlotte, North Carolina

Recognizing excellence and innovation in using problem solving to address public safety issues.

The Center for Problem-Oriented Policing and this year's host, the Charlotte-Mecklenburg Police Department, invite you to join your colleagues and friends from around the world at the 2004 International Problem-Oriented Policing Conference in Charlotte, North Carolina.

The program for this 15th annual conference will offer panel discussions and plenary sessions on subjects of timely interest to today's law enforcement personnel. These are just a few of the topics scheduled:

- Open Air Drug Dealing
- Analyzing Fear of Crime
- Analyzing Homicides
- CCTV in Public Places
- False Burglar Alarms
- Risky Places: Why So Many Bad Things Happen in a Few Places
- Problem Analysis for Crime Analysts
- Street Racing
- Identity Theft

Special Feature

The Herman Goldstein Award for Excellence in Problem-Oriented Policing will be presented at the luncheon on Thursday, October 28. The award recognizes innovative and effective problem-oriented policing projects that have resolved crime, disorder, or public safety problems successfully. In addition, you will have the opportunity to hear the winner, finalists, and others discuss their problem-solving activities during selected conference sessions.
